Customer Reviews

Ferebee, a former book reviewer, occasional contributor to National Public Radio, and creator of a black book Web site, brings a fervent love of books and reading to this informative resource on collecting and caring for books on African American heritage. Ferebee begins with general information on books, including how to care for them properly. Her recommendations, preceded by information on the genre and the cultural or historic context for the particular works, are divided into fiction and nonfiction with subcategories that include slave narratives, autobiographies and biographies, colonial literature to contemporary fiction, and arts and entertainment. She offers separate chapters on special collections and children's literature. Ferebee concludes with resources for securing the recommended books. A valuable resource for readers interested in creating a "legacy" collection of books on African Americans from classics to contemporary fiction and nonfiction. Praise for How to Create Your Own African American Library

Like a farmer sowing seed, Dorothy Ferebee's carefully chosen selections for an African American library supply both essential guidance for newcomers to a literature more discussed than read, and the groundwork for delicious debate among avid readers of this genre over the author's choices.

DERRICK BELL Author of Ethical Ambition: Living a Life of Meaning and Worth and Faces at the Bottom of the Well: The Permanence of Racism

Dorothy Ferebee has done the hard work of amassing and categorizing an impressive body of African American works, historical and contemporary, fiction and nonfiction, and made them easy to navigate for the reader and collector. Thank goodness someone's organized this at last.
